FRIDAY MARCH 17, 1876.

A Warning. [From the New York Times.] The failure of the Bank of the State of New York is the greatest disaster that has yet happened to any bank included in the national system. It is also one of the most disgraceful. This bank bad a capital of 22,000,000, and on October 2, 1874, reported a surplus of $400,000 and undivided profits of $281,000. Its net deposits were then about $4,000,000. For the last week the average of net deposits reported is only $2,855,200. The falling off in deposits is not an infallible sign that confidence in the solvency of a tank is lessened, but where it takes place on so extensive a scale as this it is a pretty severe test of the soundness is a pretty severe test of the soundness of the management. Unfortunately the management of the Bark of the State of New York was not able to stand this test. The vice-president of the bank had kent a sum of $230,000 to himself. A concern called the United States Attrition Flour Company had overdrawn its account $456,000, and the same concern had borrowed in addition the sum of $425,000. None of these loans were testified by good security. A firm in the standard DWARF PRARS. fortified by good security. A firm in the produce commission business had also been permitted to overdraw $50,000, and $240, 000 of protested paper, besides the sums before mentioned, are among the assets. All these sums put together, counted as a total loss, do not wipe out the capital and surplus, and unless there is a great deal more of wreck-stuff than is now suspected the entire loss will be sustained by the sbareholders. The notebolders cannot possibly lose a dollar, and in all probability the depositors will be paid in full. The details of the downfall, as briefly summarized above, make up a very bad case against the management of this bank. The annals of banking, however, contain many

The enormous fall which has taken place n the money value of almost all descriptions of property has thus far resulted in surprisingly few bank failures. When thousands of fortunes have melted away and left no trace, it is to be expected that banks should f ail occasionally. The business of a bank is to borrow money from one set of men and lend it to another. If those who have borrowed do not pay back, the banks them .. selves may be unable to satisfy their creditors. But if the maxims which experience has ce ablished for the safe conduct of the banking business are followed it rarely happens that banks go down, even in such stormy times as these. The national bank act is an excellent law, but it is impossible for any governmental machinery to supply character or brains to those who are wanting in the e respects. Responsibility must be lodged somewhere, and where more than a thousand million of dollars are placed in the bands of boards of bank directors, and by them loaned to the people of so vest a country as the United States, too much reliance must not be placed in the laws or officers of the Government. The presidents, cashiers, and active managers of the several banks are the persons who should be beld responsible, and they should be carefully selected. Carelessness inevitably breeds dishonesty and breaches of trust. It is so in politics, and it is the same in borrowing and lending money.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times mentions a s'ory which is in circulation as to the cause of the colmpse of the Carlist as to the cause of the collapse of the Carlist war. It is said that the late Duke of Modena ordered in his will that the legacy which he left to Don Carlos's wife should not be paid fair day thereafter, on which day an omnibus will tair day thereafter, on which day an omnibus will fair day thereafter, on which day an omnibus will be a south and however at before peace bad been declared, resulting either in the victory or definite defeat of Don Carlos, who was to acquire this fortune either on the throne of Spain or in exile. Hence, since he had lost all hope of ascending the throne, Don Carlos thought it would be useless to prolong his resistance, and that it would be better to bring the war to a close, quit Spair, and take possession of the fortune left him under these conditions.

It is related of Secretary Bristow that while looking for a house last autumn, when he had found one that he liked, he asked what the rent was. " Seven thousand dollars," answered the agent. Mr. Bristow. thought for a moment, and then said: "I was wondering what I could possibly do with that other thousand," a Cabinet minister's salary being only $8,000 a year. The $7,000 house was not rented.
